
MISSING PEOPLE

Issues for the Australian Community

by

Dr Monika Henderson and Mr Peter Henderson

An independent study commissioned by the National Missing Persons Unit at the Australian Bureau of Criminal Intelligence

Executive Summary 1

Background 2

Objectives.....	2
Defining missing persons.....	2
Organisations involved in locating missing persons.....	3
Sources of information.....	3

The Missing Person Population 4

Incidence.....	4
Diversity of missing persons.....	5
Characteristics of the missing person population reported to police.....	7
Circumstances of the missing person incident.....	11
Outcome.....	14

Impacts on the Australian community 17

Health impacts.....	17
Impacts on work or business.....	17
Impacts on quality of life and routine activities.....	18
Emotional impacts.....	18
Relationship impacts.....	19
Economic impacts.....	19
Other impacts.....	19

Costs to the Australian community 23

Costs associated with locating missing persons reported to police.....	23
Employment-related costs.....	26
Health-related costs.....	28
Direct costs in support to missing persons while missing.....	30

Costs of prevention, intervention, advocacy and policy functions.....	31
Other direct costs to families and friends associated with persons reported missing to police.....	32
Other costs associated with persons reported missing to police.....	33
The overall economic impact of missing persons on the Australian community	33
Estimated costs of missing persons registered with non-police tracing services.....	34

Effectiveness of services 3 6

Locating missing persons.....	36
Satisfaction with police and agency services.....	36
Experiences and satisfaction with existing support services.....	37
Perceptions about specialised support.....	38
Access to information held by governments departments and other agencies.....	38
Most important area to improve.....	39

Areas of need and potential strategies 4 0

Support services.....	40
Police policy and practice.....	43
Access to government information.....	44
Property and other legal issues.....	45
Structure and coordination.....	46
Education and public awareness.....	47
Prevention.....	48
Further research.....	49

Conclusion 5 0

References 5 1

Appendices 5 2

Acknowledgement

While we have been the producers of this research report, and therefore the ones to take full responsibility for its conclusions, the study is the contribution of many. We would like to thank in particular the 300 families and friends of missing persons who have shared their experiences and hopes with us. We would also like to give special thanks to officers in police missing persons units and in the Salvation Army, Australian Red Cross, and International Social Service tracing services for contributing time and effort within what is invariably a heavy workload. Also, our appreciation to the many people in government departments, non-government organisations and community groups who have responded to our requests for information. And last but not least, our thanks to the National Missing Persons Unit for all their assistance and for commissioning the research. Many people have been unstinting in their time and cooperation to help produce what is hopefully an information base to further Australia's response to an issue that is costly in social, psychological, and economic terms, and we thank them for their efforts.

Monika and Peter Henderson